Integrated Care Fellowship

Psychiatrists can dramatically improve the reach and impact of mental health services using integrated care approaches. The University of Washington's Integrated Care Fellowship is committed to preparing our trainees for this emerging field.

This unique program helps trainees develop the clinical and leadership skills necessary to provide effective mental health care for populations. Its groundbreaking curriculum and faculty experts prepare fellows to provide integrated care through delivery of consultation to non-mental health settings (such as primary care), to consult via telepsychiatry, and to improve systems of care through innovative leadership.

Trainees can customize their experience by focusing on specific clinical conditions or populations (such as Pediatrics or Perinatal). Training activities focus on:

- Collaborative Care
- Telepsychiatry/Rural Experiences
- Quality Improvement
- Data-driven Care

"This was a terrific, hands-on opportunity that gave me enormous insight into the complexities of launching an integrated care program and the components that are necessary for success."

- Sara Haack, MD, MPH, 2016-17 Integrated Care Fellow
